In the past, a small English village called ~~the~~ Lanreath, in Cornwall, had three pubs, two shops and a post office. Now it doesn't have ~~but~~ any of these. The post office, the last shop and the last pub were all ~~recently~~ closed down. Now the council wants to close the primary school. The school has had excellent results and is very popular with children and parents. The problem is that the school doesn't have enough students and the council says it costs too much ~~to~~ money to keep it open for only a ~~small~~ few children. The villagers decided to fight the council's ruling. The whole village packed up, including sheep and cows, and travelled ~~five~~ hours to London. They went to a park and created a miniature Lanreath. They showed ~~the more~~ best of village life – playing traditional games, doing a traditional dance and holding a cake sale. Some of ~~all~~ the teachers also taught a lesson for Lanreath Primary School pupils.

The BBC made a TV programme about the story: Power To The People: The Invasion of Islington, presented by ~~X~~ Tim Samuels.
