When it's your turn to ask a question, read the question and memorize it. Then go and ask the question to the person whose name you wrote in the corresponding numbered sentence.

1. How long have you been studying English?
2. What will the weather be like tomorrow?
3. What were you doing at 7 o'clock yesterday evening?
4. What are you going to do after class?
5. Have you ever been to London?
6. What did you do last night?
7. What job would you like to do?
8. Are you living in a house or a flat?
9. How often do you cook?
10. What kind of films do you like?
11. How do you usually travel to school or work?
12. Where are you living at the moment?
13. How are you feeling today?
14. What hobbies did you have when you were a child?
15. What is your favourite food?
16. Is there anything you dislike about your job or studies?
17. Have you visited any foreign countries?
18. Can you play a musical instrument?
19. What time do you normally wake up?

What did they say?

In this energizing class activity, students report back answers to questions using reported speech and race to complete sentences about what people in the class said.

Before class, make one copy of the worksheet for each student. Also, make one copy of the question sheet for each group of three or four.

Procedure

Before you begin, you may wish to review reported speech with the class.

Explain that the students are going to report back answers to questions using reported speech and race to complete sentences about what people in the class said. Tell them that the aim of the game is to be the first group to complete all the sentences correctly.

Divide the class into groups of three or four. Give each student a copy of the worksheet.

Ask the students to write down the names of all the students in the class that are not in their group on their worksheet. One name should be at the beginning of each sentence.

Next give each group a question sheet.

A student from the group then reads the first question on the sheet and memorizes it. The student then goes to another group to ask the person whose name they wrote in sentence 1 the question, e.g. Sophia.

Example:

Student: How long have you been studying English?

Sophia: I have been studying English for five years.

The student then returns to the group and reports the answer using reported speech.

Example:

Sophia said that she had been studying English for five years.

Everyone in the group then writes down what the student said on their own worksheet.

If the person they want to ask the question to is away from the group asking a question, the student must wait until the person returns to their group before they ask the question.

When everyone has written the sentence, the next student asks the second question to the person whose name is written in sentence 2.

When a group thinks they have finished, they show you one of their worksheets. If they have written all the sentences correctly, they win the game. If not, they must go back and find their mistake.
