

Good food, shame about the music

Bistro Giacomo is a newly opened, Italian restaurant in Cardiff city centre. I went there for dinner with a friend on Friday evening.

The service was friendly and helpful, and the food was fresh and tasty. The house wine was also very good. The bottle of Chianti that we chose from the excellent wine list was delicious.

However, the music was so loud that it was difficult for my friend and I to have a conversation. We asked our waiter to turn it down a little, but she said she couldn't. Also, there are a lot of tables for the size of the restaurant, so we felt a bit cramped. On top of that, it was a bit pricey and the bill was much higher than we expected.

Overall, we enjoyed our visit, but I don't think I would go again. There are plenty of other restaurants in the area with a better atmosphere, good food and better prices. If I were you, I'd head for one of those and give Bistro Giacomo a miss. 😞
